ACKNOWLEDGMENT

It is a pleasure to express my sincere gratitude to Prof. Dr. Mohamed A. Abdo, Professor of Organic Chemistry, Faculty of Science, Tanta University for the helpful criticism, indispensable help and constant encouragement he showed during the course of this work.

I owe a particular debt of gratitude to Prof. Dr. Mohamed F. Abdel-Megeed, Professor of Physical Organic Chemistry Faculty of Science, Tanta University who suggested and induced the research interest in this problem, provided constant council and encouragement, and coordinated the production stages of the thesis. and my sincere gratitude and appreciation for providing great assistance in the determination of high resolution ^1H and ^{13}C nuclear magnetic resonance and molecular modelling detrn.

I would also like to pay tribute to Prof. Dr. Mohamed A. Saleh Professor assistant of Organic Chemistry Faculty of Science, Tanta University who kindly spared enough time for undertaking the onerous task of reading the manuscript and offering invaluable comments and suggestions.

My deep thanks are also due to Prof. Dr. Mohamed Ghoneim. Professor of Inorganic and Physical Chemistry for his offered helpful guidance, advise and assistance in voltametric studies.

Thanks also for Prof. Dr. El-Sayed Mabrouk, Professor of Physical Chemistry, Faculty of Science Zagazeg University, for his offered, helpful guidance, advise and assistance in voltametric studies.

My deep thanks are also extended to Dr. John P. Bader and Mischael R. Grever, Special Assistants for AIDS Department of health & Human services at National Institute of Health (USA) for their valuable in vitro Anti-HIV activity of result samples.

My thanks are also extended to all my colleagues for their kind support and convenient conditions they created around me.

I would like to thank once again all above people for making comments which enabled me to improve both the content and presentation of the thesis.

Finally, I thank my wife who cared and suffered so much in order to create something, I hoped in worth while.
