3. The Muslim presence in Europe is regarded as a key element in establishing better communication and co-existence between the different religions and beliefs by encouraging discussion between different faiths and ideologies. This will no doubt bolster the path towards global peace.

4. Through their religious and cultural legacy as well as their presence in many different European states, Muslims of Europe represent a supporting element to the efforts of strengthening the European Union. With its diverse religious and cultural make up, Europe can act as an important civilizational signpost with a key role in maintaining international stability between influential world powers.

and the right to perform their religious obligations does not serve the interests of Muslims nor the European societies to which they belong.

6. Muslims of Europe are encouraged to participate in the political process as active citizens. Real citizenship includes political engagement from casting one's vote to taking part in political institutions.

7. Muslims of Europe emphasise their respect for pluralism and the religious and philosophical diversity of the multicultural societies they live in. They believe that Islam affirms the diversity that exists between people and so is not discomforted by this multicultural reality. Rather Islam calls for members of society to appreciate and enrich one another through their differences.

Islam's Contribution to Europe

1. The universal and humane principles of Islam endorse the coming together of the world so long as the rights and particularities of peoples are respected and the principles of fairness in trade and co-operation are observed without exploitation and hegemonic use of power. Hence Muslims of Europe consider it their duty to consolidate relations between Europe and the Muslim world. This requires that we free ourselves from the mutual prejudices and negative impressions that exist between Islam and the West so that bridges of fruitful exchange can be built.

2. Given its culturally rich heritage and emphasis on humanity, Islam, through its presence in Europe, can participate in enhancing important values in contemporary society such as justice, freedom, fraternity, equality and solidarity. It gives primacy to moral considerations as well as to scientific, technical and economic progress. This participation can be beneficial and enriching for the whole society.
