Acknowledgments

I would like to express my extreme indebtedness and deepest gratitude to Professor Amal Aly Mazhar, Professor of Drama at Cairo University, for her indispensable role in the supervision of this thesis. Her most valuable scholarly advice and constructive guidance in addition to her always-encouraging words, motherly attitude and insightful observations had a magical effect on my endeavours throughout.

I owe great appreciation and gratitude for Professor Mona Al-Halawany, Professor of Drama and Head of the English Department, Cairo University for her kindness, understanding and wonderful support.

I would like also to record my sincerest thanks to my seniors and colleagues in the Department of English for their heartfelt encouragement: Professor of Novel Sahar Sobhy / Assistant Professor of Linguistics Olaa Hafez / Assistant Professor of Drama Hala Al-Borolusy (for her long-distance support) and a special note of appreciation to Assistant Professor of Drama Dalia Al-Shayal for her sincere care.

Last, but not least, I would like to acknowledge my gratitude to my family, being most fortunate to have them: my dear parents for their endless care, understanding and patience with my over-stressed mood, my lovely younger sister, Dr. Dalia, for her helpful academic remarks, my dear husband and wonderful children, Adham and Alaa Allah, for their deep understanding and encouragement, and my grandfather, who would have been extremely happy with this thesis.

Finally, I would like to dedicate this thesis to every young man or lady in the Arab world to reconsider their infatuation with Western styles, and to be fully conscious of the threat of cultural hegemony that is invading our Arab societies attempting to reshape our thoughts, beliefs, traditions and even religions. I would like to assert the fact that we, citizens of the Arab world, are not better than anyone or superior to anyone, but 'we are not inferior', because all human beings are equal.
